Adopt Healthy Habits in 2023 - Walking In Nature

By Kaanchan S Farkiya

The New Year is the perfect time to embark on a new era of healthy, active living and one of them is to take a daily nature walk and which could be more rejuvenating. Walking in nature or in your neighborhood could be a wonderful way to keep your mental health recharged. Walking is also beneficial for your whole body as it strengthens your legs and whole body. For some people who can not go to the gym, walking could be a good way to be active. There are so many benefits in doing brisk walking such as it stimulating circulation, supporting weight loss, firm-up muscles, and strengthening joints. Being immersed in nature is also proven to help ease your stress levels and create a feeling of inner peace and well-being. I love that walking in nature can affect and change our brains and cognition and it has been found that walking in nature can significantly help our short-term memory. Children also enjoy nature walks and you can include some activities while walking such as mindfulness exercises.
First, stop focusing on any thoughts including your mind, and enjoy the present moment with a very simple mindfulness exercise. Have a conversation with your partner and ask questions such as:

1. Notice five things that you can see
2. Find two colors of your choice
3. Notice three things that you can hear
4. Notice anything that you can feel etc.

Enjoy every little moment and try to focus on little things, such as noticing the tiny ant that lost its trail, a small tiny plant growing on tree bark or the sound of birds. Such mindfulness exercise has incredible health benefits and the therapeutic power of having a short walk in nature. You will undoubtedly notice when you try it. May your all dreams can come true and I wish you all a truly remarkable and blissful year ahead!
