A Budget Op-Ed from County Supervisor Terra Lawson-Remer

After several years of upheaval in our community, nation, and the world, many of us have thankfully started to return to a "new normal." The worst of the pandemic is over, inflation strain is easing, and we have returned to enjoying everything our beautiful county has to offer.

But while many of us have moved forward, it's important that we don't lose sight that many of us are still bouncing back, or know those who are. Housing costs remain high, we continue to see increasing rates of mental health crises and addiction, and many working families are struggling. As the agency with primary responsibility for health and human services programs in our region, it's the County of San Diego's responsibility to help address these challenges to lift up all of our residents.

On June 27, I joined my colleagues to cast a bipartisan vote approving a County budget that prioritizes community investment, equity, and sustainability. With commitments to fight homelessness, direct those with mental health and substance use disorders toward better care, protect our beaches and coastline, and invest in core community services, this $8.11 billion investment plan will strengthen our communities and infrastructure.

Voters put me in this job two years ago to change County government by making it more equitable, responsive, and representative. For decades, our County elected leadership ducked responsibility and refused to step-up to tackle the challenges of our region. Those decades of neglect have left us with ALOT of work to do. This new budget is about putting our values of service into action — by funding positions and making investments so the County can actually do that work.

We're hiring people to expand social service programs to help our most vulnerable populations, and investing in critical infrastructure like roads, public parks, and affordable housing.
For the first time ever, more than $40 million is earmarked to increase affordable housing and provide services to prevent homelessness and provide housing stability for families, and especially for populations that are more likely to experience homelessness, such as seniors and the LGBTQIA+ youth.

With rising rates of mental illness and drug and alcohol abuse, the County has made an unprecedented bold move, directing nearly $740 million toward mental health and substance use disorder treatment, including funding for Mobile Crisis Response Teams, 41 additional long-term beds for inpatient mental health care, and outpatient and residential substance use disorder services. And because the illegal fentanyl and opioid crisis continues to harm our communities, more than $7 million has been set aside to address opioid addiction.

This year's budget also invests in working families. More than $164 million will support additional staff across all Health and Human Services departments to support safety net programs like CalWORKs, CalFresh, and Medi-Cal. It helps Seniors age in place by allowing higher wages to be paid to In-Home Supportive Services caregivers, increasing the pool of people who can care for our seniors in their own homes as they age. And it will provide additional funds to support foster youth and young people that are transitioning out of the foster care system.

Since supporting our communities is the most important investment we can make, we must not neglect safeguarding our beautiful environment and fighting climate change.

Our beaches and coastlines are some of our most vital regional assets, and protecting them has been one of my top priorities as your Supervisor. With an investment of $52 million dollars the County will build and improve stormwater infrastructure to protect our beautiful beaches and coastlines.

The budget also provides significant funding to continue our efforts to build resilience in the face of a changing climate. Funding has been earmarked to continue work on our Regional Decarbonization Framework to help communities move our region toward zero-carbon emissions, design a new Zero Carbon Portfolio Plan that aims for a 90 percent reduction in greenhouse gas emissions in County facilities by 2030, and plant more than 5,000 trees.

We are a region of diverse and proud communities, and this budget was built to support and uplift them. As the County's motto says, "The noblest motive is the public good," and we will continue to work hard to uphold and nurture our communities, our residents, and our environment.

Mental Health Awareness

By Kaanchan S Farkiya

Mental health is a fundamental aspect of our well-being, and it affects every individual regardless of their background or circumstances. Taking care of our mental health should be a priority for everyone, just like we prioritize our physical health. The mental health industry can be complex and challenging to navigate. It is essential to have accessible resources and a proactive approach to mental health care. Here are some steps and resources to consider when building a mental health care package:

Education and Awareness: Start by educating yourself about mental health, common mental health challenges, and how they can be managed. Understanding the signs and symptoms of mental health issues can help you identify when you or someone you know may need help.

Self-Care Practices: Incorporate self-care practices into your daily routine. This may include mindfulness exercises, meditation, regular exercise, spending time in nature, engaging in hobbies, and getting enough rest.

Seeking Professional Help: If you or someone you know is struggling with mental health challenges, don't hesitate to seek professional help. Mental health professionals, such as psychologists, psychiatrists, counselors, and therapists, can provide guidance and support tailored to your specific needs.

Community Support: Joining support groups or mental health communities can be helpful, as it allows you to connect with others who may be going through similar experiences.
Online Resources: There are many online resources available for mental health support, including websites, forums, and mobile applications. These platforms offer information, self-assessment tools, and coping strategies.

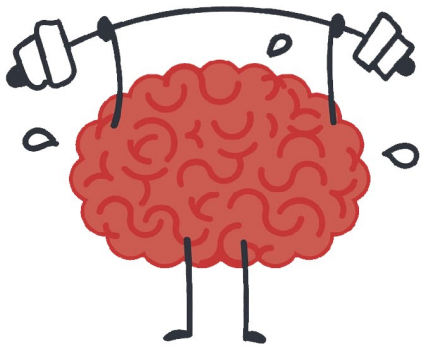
Teletherapy: Teletherapy or online counseling is becoming increasingly popular and accessible. It allows you to access mental health support from the comfort of your home, making it convenient for many individuals.

Workplace Support: Some workplaces offer mental health programs, counseling services, or employee assistance programs (EAPs). If available, take advantage of these resources to support your mental health at work.

Financial Considerations: Mental health care can be costly, so consider exploring options such as insurance coverage or sliding scale fees based on income, especially if you are seeking professional help.

Government and Nonprofit Organizations: Many governments and nonprofit organizations run mental health awareness campaigns and offer resources for mental health support. Check out their websites for information and assistance.

Family and Friends: Don't underestimate the power of social support. Reach out to trusted friends and family members when you need someone to talk to or seek help.



Remember that mental health care is a continuous process, and it's okay to seek help even if you're not in crisis. Being proactive about your mental health and seeking appropriate resources can lead to a more balanced and fulfilling life. Take care of your mind, just as you would take care of your body.

Independence Day Fireworks Return to Mira Mesa

Mira Mesa celebrated Independence Day on July 2nd with a return of the annual fireworks show, set off from the fields at Wangenheim Middle School across Black Mountain Road from Hourglass Community Park. The show was funded by donations from the community and sponsorships from local businesses and Scripps Mesa Fireworks saved $17,000 by having the show on July 2nd rather than on July 4th. MMTC sponsored a Community Picnic from 4pm to 9pm at Hourglass Park, with the fireworks taking place at 9pm.
