Reflections on Our Current State

Today, I want to take a moment to echo the sentiments of so many San Diegans — family, friends, neighbors who have all been impacted, whether directly or indirectly, by the policies, statements, and actions of our federal administration — and who feel a sense of helplessness, or perhaps even hopelessness, in the face of it all.

The United States we are raising our children in today no longer resembles the country that welcomed my immigrant parents with open arms as their families fled war or conflict. The country we see today is as divided as ever — especially as our federal administration is tearing families apart, detaining immigrants and citizens alike (including children), and has resulted in the deaths of community members who were called to action protecting their neighbors.

Even as an elected official, I recognize that our power against our federal administration is limited. And I, too, share the sense of helplessness and hopelessness I hear from people in my life and the residents I represent. Especially as we collectively witness federal agents acting in our communities with seeming impunity, as state and local laws and ordinances defending our community values are continually circumvented by federal authority, and as erratic federal policies continue to cause tremendous cultural and economic damage.

Despite everything we are facing, the truth that we must recognize together is:

We are not helpless.

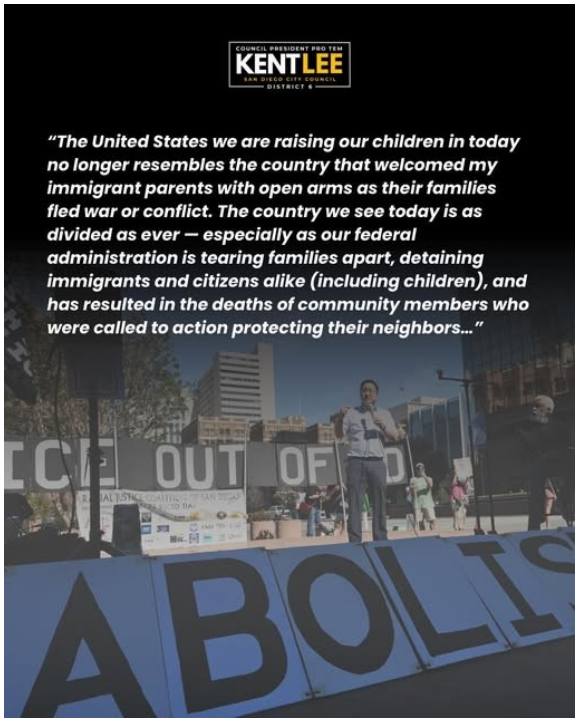
We are not hopeless.

We can, and we must help.

We can, and we must inspire hope.

We can, and we must push back.

For those of us who are able, we must continue to do what we can — whether it is through statements or in protest. At the same time, we should not underestimate the power of small daily actions that cultivate the hope we need to keep our communities strong. This can start with caring for your family, friends, or neighbors; simply tending to your community will impact you and many others. Whether you choose to check in on vulnerable neighbors, make your voice heard through your federal representatives, join an action at your local street corner, or rally with tens of thousands of San Diegans on March 28th — we each have the ability to help, and to inspire hope in others to do the same.



We do not know exactly what challenges lie ahead. The moment we are living through is unpredictable, and at times it may feel overwhelming. But uncertainty is not the end of the story — it is the space where courage, community, and collective action can shape what comes next.

We are not alone in the desire to push back against fascism — and in this moment of darkness, it is this collective desire to help, to hope, and to fight that can allow us to move forward together.

I stand with our residents throughout the City of San Diego, and the immigrant community throughout this country, who continue to believe in a United States that welcomed us and those before us, where everyone is valued, where compassion and humanity come before fear and destruction, and where we the people will not stop demanding greater transparency and accountability — all to support the collective action needed to defend the democracy we cherish.

Mira Mesa Community Planning Group

By Jeff Stevens, Chair Mira Mesa Community Planning Group

Are you interested in the future of the Mira Mesa Community? Have you ever seen a new development appear and wonder where it came from? Have you noticed that we currently have three major park projects including a new swimming pool in progress? How did that happen?

The Mira Mesa Community Planning Group has the responsibility to review all development projects for consistency with the Mira Mesa Community Plan and actively works to make sure that we have the parks and other public facilities called for in the Community Plan. Planning new projects often starts years before a single shovel of dirt comes out of the earth. For example, planning the Stone Creek project, which will eventually redevelop Vulcan's property in Carroll Canyon (currently used for gravel mining), has been in progress since 2006. That is an extreme case, but planning periods of a few years for large projects are common.

Public facilities also take a long time from proposal to completion. Parks and other public facilities are identified in the Community Plan but cannot be built until funding is available. Sometimes this can be done as part of a development project, but more often it is the City's responsibility. Until 2022, developers paid into a fund, the Facilities Benefit Assessment (FBA), that was designed to build all the public facilities in the Community Plan. It was a long wait for enough money to accumulate to build a project, but it did give some assurance that the money would eventually be there, and as a result, most of the public facilities in the 1992 Mira Mesa Community Plan have been built. The City's Parks Master Plan terminated the community-specific FBA programs, so now all developer fees go into a citywide pot, and we must rely on the City Council to provide us with the money we need for facilities.

Park planning can also take a long time even when money is finally available. The Planning Group identifies park sites, but the Mira Mesa Recreation Advisory Group works on park design and holds public workshops during the park design phase. The workshops that led to the design for the pool and other features currently under construction at Mira Mesa Community Park were held in 2020.

Members of the Mira Mesa Community Planning Group are never surprised to see a new development because they have likely seen it years in advance. If you would like to be a part of this process, please consider attending Mira Mesa Community Planning Group meetings. We currently have vacancies for a business member and a property owner member, but residential vacancies occur frequently, and even if you are not a member, you can still participate in the presentations and discussions at the meetings.

International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination

By Kaanchan S Farkiya

Observed annually on March 21, the International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination was proclaimed by the United Nations General Assembly in 1966. This day serves as a vital call to action to raise awareness about the consequences of racial discrimination and to promote global equality.

Key initiatives and events associated with this day include:

- UN Commemorative Events: Plenary meetings and discussions held by the UN to highlight the impact of discrimination.
- Awareness Campaigns: Social media initiatives and community events led by organizations and individuals to promote racial equality.
- Policy Discussions: Engagement by governments and organizations to address systemic racism and implement inclusive policies.

The significance of this day lies in its ability to:

- Raise Awareness: Highlight the ongoing impacts of racial discrimination.
- Encourage Action: Prompt governments and individuals to take concrete steps toward eliminating racism.
- Promote Equality: Foster a culture of inclusion and respect for human rights.
- Honor Victims: Commemorate victims of racial violence, such as those of the Sharpeville massacre.
- Build Global Solidarity: Unite people worldwide in the fight against injustice.

This day serves as a powerful reminder that collective action is essential to creating a more just and equitable society.
